Biggest Game Preserve.

The largest private game preserve in the United States, it is said, will be established upon the famous King ranch, adjoining this place. This ranch is owned by Mrs. Henrietta M. King, and embraces about 1,250,000 acres, the proposed game preserve will be one solid tract of 90,000 acres bordering the gulf coast. It will be inclosed by a high wire net fence capable of contining deer, antelope, and other wild game.—Kingsville (Tex.) dispatch to the New York Sun.

Beware the Cat.

The "fireside sphinx," as poets call the family cat, has again come in for a berating by the health department, or, rather, owners of the aforesaid animal who do not encourage it to be strictly aristocratic in its tendencies have incurred the distinction.

A case was reported in Chicago last A case was reported in Chicago last was perweek where the Angese cat was perweek where the Angese cat was perweek where the Angese cat in the

A case was reported in Chicago last week where the Angopa cat was permitted to associate with the calf in the barn and contracted a skin disease thereby. The cat affected the favorite child of the household, who was in the habit of carrying it about and fondling it, and now both child and cat are under treatment.

The health department insists that the place for the "fireside sphinx" is by the fireside and not in barns and promiscuous places where it may contract disease and make havoc in the home.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Teaching Horse to Jump. The "making" or breaking of a hunter is a task which usually falls to the hands of an experienced if not a professional horseman. But some knowledge of how to jump is desirable in every saddle horse, and the process of educating your horse in the rudiments of going cross-country is likely to be beneficial both to you and to him.

Almost any horse can jump and every good saddle horse can jump well for this reason: A good natural saddle animal carries his hind legs well beneath him, and is thus possessed of the essential power to jump, ability which is more dependent upon "knack" than upon bone and musels. Your first attempt at cross-country work will probably be made at an opening in a post and rall fence, where all but the bottom rall has been taken down. From 15 to 18 inches is high enough for your first jump. It must not be high enough to discourage the horse, for at this stage it would be fatal to allow him to refuse.—Country Life in America.

A Scourge of Elephants.

The number of elephants in Ceylon is increasing so rapidly that they are becoming a terror to the traveler and a scourge to the planter, the largest estimate of the forest department placing their number at 5,000. The great native landhoiders arranged, therefore, with the help of their tenants, to relieve the latter of one of after grievances, and at the same time to derive from the operation considerable sport and more profit, for in Ceylon the elephant has a very real market value, for he not only figures consplouously in all ceremonies of religion and of state, but is employed in forest clearing, cultivation, irrigation, and pretty much every other form of draft work, being, when properly trained, a vasful and valuable animal.
